Anglo-Eastern Maritime Academy (AEMA) – nestled in a beautiful valley that is surrounded by the Sahyadri hill ranges along the banks of Ulhas River few kilometres away from Karjat town in Maharashtra – strongly believes to be recognised as a leading, innovative, dedicated and practical education provider in the maritime industry. "And within a span of 10 years AEMA has created more than 3000 jobs for their cadets," proudly announced Mr Mahesh Subramanian, Vice-Principal, AEMA. He welcomed the guests, parents, and cadets on behalf of Capt Sureen Narang, Principal at the passing out ceremony of DNS Batch -17 early January.

Capt KN Deboo, Director and Principal, Anglo Eastern Maritime Training Centre (AEMTC) promised to fulfil Minister for Road Transport & Highways, Shipping – Mr Nitin

Gadkari's, wish of India being the number one supplier of seafarers by increasing the strength of intake of cadets. On this note, Capt Deboo expressed that AEMA follows 4Cs policy: Commitment, courage, compassion and credibility and encompassing all the 4C's is the 'I' that is Integrity. "This 4Cs policy helps us to create a good seafarer and supply quality seafarers to the country," said Capt Deboo.

Appreciating AEMA's endeavours for creating jobs for their cadets, the Chief Guest, Mr Vijay Suryawanshi, IAS Collector, Raigad, Alibaug expressed, "It is good to know that I have a wonderful institute in my district. Cadets you should respect all the nationals when you are onboard."

In sync with Mr Suryawanshi's thoughts, the Guest of Honour, Mr Anil Paraskar, IPS Superintendent of Police, Raigad, Alibaug added, "Cadets you represent us, our culture, our ethos, so be respectful towards each other onboard the ship."

Being from a police background, Mr Paraskar admitted that he was unaware of the seafaring as a career. "I just assumed that seafaring is all about earning money and visiting different countries, but today I know the truth. Once I had been posted for sea patrolling, and that is when I realised, the people who work onboard for months together live the toughest life," stated Mr Paraskar.

A cultural programme was organised showcasing the talents of the cadets through singing, dancing and in between comedy acts, which was a laughter riot that kept the students and audiences entertained. Also a special act by cadets that highlighted 'Things you should avoid during offshore leave' gained appreciation from all the dignitaries'. Capt Jairaj Nakhwa, Dean, (Exam & SSTP) then gave the course report and explained the seafaring profession and the facilities available at AEMA to the guests and parents.

The guests were given a guided tour of the Academic Block and through various projects, which amazed them and showed a sense of assertion towards the cadets. This assurance will motivate the cadets to enhance their skills and intelligence on-board the ship.

An emotional Cadet Mohammed Hussian expressed his gratitude to AEMA and his teachers for sharing their extensive knowledge and experience with them and said, "The days spent at AEMA were like a roller coaster ride."
